With the right balance of hardware and software, a good modern PC should be able to offer good performance in a variety of areas. Modern PCs include plenty of new components, such as the Intel Core i7 processor, which takes care of all of the computations involved in multimedia and games. Besides offering a wide selection of hardware, the modern PC may also include numerous programs and utilities, such as Microsoft Word, Adobe Photoshop, Adobe Premiere Pro, and plenty of other software for multimedia production and editing. But we will only be talking about the gaming performance in this review. Below we have collected a list of some of the most popular video games for desktop PCs, as well as some of the best gaming laptops for desktop PC gamers. The desktop performance depends on the type of video cards used in the computer. Nvidia and ATI are the two most popular graphics card manufacturers. Their products can be used to provide additional video output ports or 3D performance. ATI ATI graphics cards are generally compatible with Windows computers, but not all of them are optimised for gaming. The recommended drivers that are required for gaming should be used. ATI graphics cards include the ATI Radeon HD 5000 series graphics cards. It was released in 2007 and is used in laptops, some high-end desktops and even some video card manufacturers. Nvidia Nvidia graphics cards are also used in modern PCs and can be purchased in several different configurations. The Nvidia GeForce 700 and newer series are the latest Nvidia graphics cards. These graphics cards are optimised for gaming and are usually compatible with all Windows computers. However, most video card manufacturers that make graphics cards use it in their laptops. Nvidia graphics cards have two main types: the GeForce, released in 2000, and the GeForce 600 series, released in 2005. These graphics cards include the Nvidia GeForce and Nvidia GeForce 600 series graphics cards. These graphics cards are optimised for desktop computers and are compatible with all Windows computers. Intel Intel graphics cards are the fastest
