A very intelligent man with a sharp eye for detail, he demonstrated some degree of wisdom when he said, 'The plan is how you ride,' not 'The plan is how you train.' I have always had a strong belief in the importance of training the head, and not just the legs. In more recent times I have made many conversations with Michael regarding cycling and his excellent website, MikeJet. Some of the things he talks about are basic physiologically, some, I hope helpful, and most important, he has a firm grasp of what motivates his devotees. And, as I have on occasion at Scottish cycling events, I have fallen for his charm and good humour. Here are some of the nuggets of wisdom that he taught me. When asked the question 'What's the difference between someone who races and a cyclist?
