particular for inhaling a powder, in particular for aerosolizing a powder. An inhaler that is used to inhale a powder from a powder container is known from U.S. Pat. No. 6,152,431. In this inhaler, the powder container has an opening through which the powder is moved with the aid of a piston rod from the powder container into the inhaler. The piston rod is arranged to be moved by the user and is coupled by a first coupling with a hollow cylinder tube in the inhaler. When the user presses a button in the inhaler, the cylinder tube is pressed in and the piston rod is moved by the coupling so as to compress the powder in the inhaler. The powder may be provided in the form of a powder cartridge. The powder thus supplied is inhaled by the user. In this known inhaler, the cylinder tube is provided with a second coupling through which the piston rod may be moved in the direction toward the powder container, with the aid of a button. The second coupling has a window that is larger than the cylindrical outer surface of the cylinder tube so that the second coupling engages into the cylindrical outer surface of the cylinder tube when the piston rod is moved. The second coupling is thus pressed radially into the cylindrical outer surface of the cylinder tube. The window in the second coupling allows the user to ascertain how far the piston rod has moved. The position of the window is adjusted and fixed in its position by the second coupling before the inhaler is assembled. The position of the window can not be changed after the inhaler is assembled without disassembling the inhaler. The position of the window is thus fixed and the user
