WELLS FARGO AGREES TO REFUND $25M OF CONTRACTS WITH CITY OF HIGGINS The city of Higgins has agreed to refund Wells Fargo & Co. $25.1 million in federal home mortgage relief investments over the last nine years. The bank's move ends a legal battle over one of the nation's most sweeping refund programs. The Homeowner Assistance to Homeowners program began in 2002 as part of the bank bailout of the banking industry. The program promised Wells Fargo & Co. and other companies that purchased home loans at discount a commuted dividend if they invested in home loans that would later be forgiven. Five homeowners from Higgins initially sued Wells Fargo this summer for the $25.1 million owed in home mortgage relief investments. The lawsuit also asked the federal court to rule on the right of the five to share a $100 million pot of money to be paid out by the federal government. The five Higgins homeowners later were joined by two other cases from other communities, and all five cases were eventually combined in federal court in Idaho. Last week, Wells Fargo agreed to refund the state $18.8 million and the city of Higgins $6.3 million to all 5,000 Oklahoma homeowners who invested in the home mortgage relief program at the bank during the eight years from 2002 to 2010. Wells Fargo paid $25.1 million of its own money to the city of Higgins and the state of Oklahoma to resolve the lawsuit. Wells Fargo & Co. immediately said it would begin the process of refunding the $25.1 million to the 5,000 homeowners across the country. A Wells Fargo spokeswoman said the bank had already begun its review of the list of borrowers to get back its money. "Wells Fargo is pleased to be able to pay refunds to

Epithelial mucin release and recovery following isoproterenol administration in anaesthetized normal and diabetic rats. The effect of isoproterenol (Iso) on the secretions of the rat trachea was studied by the recovery of carbohydrate following its injection into the trachea. The recovery was closely related to the content of mucin in the epithelium. Mucin recovery following Iso injection, was increased in the epithelium of normal rats. Insulin pretreatment of the rats increased the recovery of tracheal mucin. In streptozotocin (STZ)-induced diabetes, the recovery of mucin following Iso injection was less in diabetic than in normal rats. The recovery of mucin was less in the submucosa than in the epithelium of normal and diabetic rats. In the submucosa of normal rats, the recovery of mucin was increased by insulin pretreatment. In STZ-induced diabetes, the recovery of mucin in the submucosa was less in diabetic rats than in normal rats. The results are interpreted as evidence of a decreased release of mucin from the epithelium in diabetes, and of an increased release from the submucosa in diabetes. The invention relates to a method for screening paper in the production of paper, in which the paper to be screened is disposed in a vessel with a vertically disposed revolving screen, as well as a screening device for carrying out the method and a device for producing paper. In order to remove the large-area coating from a paper sheet, it is known to arrange a rotating screen between a fixed container wall and a paper web. In this arrangement, the paper web will make contact with the surface of the rotating screen. In this way, the coating can be caused to adhere to the surface of the rotating screen. In order to prevent the paper sheet from passing through the screen during the process, it is known to apply suction to the paper web to adhere the same to the surface of the screen. The paper web is then detached from the screen by increasing the suction. Although the known device for screening paper works well, it has been found to be sensitive to variations in pressure in the area where the paper to
