For example: I have bought the bicycle in the store. Here the bicycle is owned by the store. In German this is not possible. One cannot talk about ownership of something as if somebody owned it. That means that in German only non-ownership is possible. So I can only talk about these two concepts: Ich habe das Fahrrad in der Zehntzündung gekauft. Here the bicycle is not owned by anybody. Sie nahm das Triebfahrzeug. Here the bicycle is owned by somebody. Is there a way to express ownership in German like this? A: You have already found a good solution, but let's see if we can find a more natural way to express this. The expression to use in your first example is Wir haben das Fahrrad in der Zehntzündung gekauft. In this case, you are talking about the bike being owned by the person who paid for it. Das Fahrrad in der Wiese gekauft haben is a more colloquial way of saying that you bought the bike in the garden, in the wild. In the second example, there is no good way of saying that the bicycle is not ca3bfb1094
