But I can't understand, why can I't use same title as @RoccoSolis without TITLE because when I remove it the timer goes away. A: I tried your code, and I think it's not a bug. I think it's by the fact that you have an exact word. Instead, try:

```
=ADDTIME(MINUTE(A1),SECOND(A1),HOUR(A1),"11:55:00")

This will take that time and add 11:55:00. I think you have more information that the title/url is in another column, so it's probably giving more than just the title. Without having any further insight on your data, it's hard to provide more information. This is just a guess however. Image copyright PA Image caption Nick Clegg led the Liberal Democrats at the general election The Liberal Democrats are to ditch their former leader Nick Clegg in a reshuffle of the party's top team, following a row over his intervention in the coalition's AV referendum. A source told the BBC he had "let the side down" and was being sidelined. The Lib Dem leader pulled the government's video advertisement supporting a Yes vote in the first referendum campaign, in which he appeared. On the first day of parliamentary sittings last month he was named by Treasury chief secretary Danny Alexander as the Conservatives' only minister who could claim victory. Mr Clegg was not in the House of Commons, but the speech was broadcast live on television. "It is not an ideal first day," the Treasury chief secretary told the House of Commons. 'On to the next' In response, the deputy prime minister was asked if his position was in any danger. "No, I have no intention of leaving the government," Mr Clegg replied. But in a memo to party members, Lib Dem deputy leader Simon Hughes wrote that Mr Clegg had been leading the party to "harm" and that he would be removing him from the post of deputy prime minister. He was the deputy prime minister for more than three years and has now let the side down, a high-level source told the BBC. "We're not saying Nick Clegg has no skills, just that he's not effective at the moment," the source said. Another senior source said: "Now that he's been
