There are many patents showing use of a liquid deaerator in a centrifugal separator to remove entrained air in a liquid. Many of these are so inefficient as to be virtually impractical. Most patents deal with separating oil and water in a conventional siphon tube, which is always a slow, costly device, limited to a certain size. In my copending patent application Ser. No. 586,250 there is disclosed a deaerator which provides a complete reduction of the volume of entrained air in a continuous operation, and so makes it possible to use a smaller more economical equipment. It also makes it possible to use a deaerator where a siphon tube cannot be used in a rapid continuous operation. One of the problems in operation of my deaerator of the above-noted copending application is that of making the deaerator work effectively to deaerate a liquid at high speed, normally several hundred thousand gallons of water per hour.Q: Como pegar o
