Permalink: Leaflet.js - vector source loading blank tiles I'm using Leaflet to create a map which displays data found in a GeoJSON-file. I'm able to display the data on the map using the following code: var points = L.geojson("/geojson/pois-points.geojson", { dataProjection: "EPSG:23032", dataStyle: styles, onEachFeature: onEachFeature }); var vector = new L.MarkerClusterGroup(); points.addLayer(vector); map = new L.Map("map", { center: [0, 0], zoom: 1 }); map.addLayer(points); With the code above I'm able to display the data on the map. The data is displayed in the correct order. I'm now trying to set up a variable source in the following way: var vectorSource = new L.TileLayer('

A nice example is Hapless deluxe Vol. 11, who has three galleries involving her that are completely unavailable anywhere else. She also has amazing galleries of Gi Brand and Suzu that are totally free on another site. It's pretty difficult to figure out where to find her work but it's definitely worth hunting her down. Description:As they both have been living together for a long time, both have developed romantic feelings for each other but were hesitant to express it because of a complicated thing going on in the character's life. Mycobacterium tuberculosis infection and related test patterns in a teaching hospital in a country of low tuberculosis incidence. The main aim of this study was to identify the prevalence of Mycobacterium tuberculosis infection among new admissions and to determine the utility of tests administered as part of routine workup. This was a retrospective study. Tuberculosis was studied by bacteriological examination of sputum, urine and other clinical specimens and by the interpretation of clinical, radiological and pathological findings. A total of 2,020 unique patients were studied, and 2.5% were culture positive. All isolates were susceptible to isoniazid, rifampin, ethambutol and pyrazinamide. Tuberculin skin tests were negative in 92.5% of the patients. Spirometry tests were performed in 6% and computed tomography (CT) scans in 78%. Imaging tests were administered as part of routine workup and CT scans were frequently requested for patients with abnormal physical findings. Tuberculin skin tests, spirometry tests, and imaging with CT scan should be administered as part of the initial examination for new admissions to identify those who have or may have tuberculosis.

Pages Wednesday, April 19, 2012 Zambia Gets UN Water-Related Contribution of US$120,000 Zambia has received a US$120,000 contribution from the United Nations to support its efforts to manage natural resources in the country. The contribution was made through the Ministry of Health, UNICEF and the UN World Water Development Report 2012. The contribution will enable the Ministry of Health to provide training to more than 2,000 healthcare workers in more than 200 health facilities in Zambia. It will also contribute towards the annual expenditure for addressing the impact of drinking water and sanitation on child health, with the goal of preventing 17,300 deaths among children under the age of five. A UN report said a lack of
