I need to move files from one location to another - it's time-consuming and it needs to be automated. Here's what I wrote: import os import sys sys.path.insert(0, "/Users/jym/Desktop/satellite/satellite/demo/") from django.http import HttpResponseRedirect from django.shortcuts import render from django.core.urlresolvers import reverse def index(request): if request.method == 'GET': return render(request,'satellite/index.html', {}) elif request.method == 'POST': for file in request.FILES: f = file.name x = os.path.abspath("/Users/jym/Desktop/satellite/satellite/demo/captures/" + f) f.save(x, save=True) return HttpResponseRedirect('/demo.html') else: return render(request,'satellite/index.html', {}) When I run this code it just returns the index.html page, not returning the HttpResponseRedirect. Welcome to a multiplayer game. Your mission is to upgrade the abandoned station - and so the game starts. You have the task to convert the station into a profitable place. The multiplayer portion of this game is fun, because some of the puzzles are a little harder than the single player. However, there is a lot more going on with the story. When I first began the game, I was having a hard time getting started. The first puzzle took me a few tries to figure out. After I figured it out, I found the rest of the game to be far more enjoyable. As stated in the title, the gameplay is a lot like the game, Hello Neighbor, by Ethan and Joel Coen. However, I do not feel like I am getting the points that I could have from trying to renovate the station. I won a couple rounds, but lost a lot. Maybe if I had played a bit more, I would have won a lot more, but my time is limited. The gameplay was very smooth and handled very well on my iPad. It felt like I was playing the game on a real train. I really like the look and style of the game and I would recommend it to others. After ending up playing the game 0cc13bf012
