Wednesday, October 23, 2010 Sunny Days and Humid Nights There are some days when I find out what I believe, and what others believe in. And, there are other days when I am exposed to things I have yet to come to an understanding of. Today was an example of the latter. said, "doesn't just apply to gardeners. It applies to all people." "Why?" I said. "People who are not seeds know that they can't be watered. They don't need to. They exist in spite of it. Seeds, on the other hand, cannot exist without water. They need it. They have no choice but to take up space, waiting to sprout. Until that time, they just lie there, needing to be watered." "And you know this about seeds." "I've known it for a long time." "And you share this with other people." "People are like seeds. You can always find them. You can nurture them, water them, to make them take root." "What happens when water is poured on seeds?" "You expect some action?" "I expect you to speak more clearly, and to answer questions. Then you have a chance to take up space, to grow, to sprout." "The best gift any person can give me is the gift of their time. You know, I have a lot of other things to do. If someone offered me all the money in the world, I would find other things to do. So, in the scheme of my day, this is not important. But, I've had some losses lately, and I want to help people who've had
