Instead, he was predicting a crash. In a December 19, 2004 article, Gary North (one of the founding members of the Society for Monetary Reform) predicted that the economy would collapse by late next year or early the following year. "The combination of rising interest rates, slowing business and consumer spending, weakening asset values, failure to produce real income growth and the general buildup of excessive debt in the economy is creating enormous financial strains that will lead to a deep recession, or even outright depression, in the coming year," North wrote. By the end of last year, North's prediction looked eerily prescient, given the panoply of bad economic news that emerged in the final months of 2004. But where does North get these predictions from? And what does he mean when he says they are the "real world evidence of a decline in God's economy?" Why a Crash? Gary North seems to derive his ideas from "signs and prophecies," according to Wikipedia. "The primary feature of North's economic theories is the emphasis on predictability. lzop is a portable, self-contained, high-speed, block-sorting, data compression program, which includes a format for storing and working with metadata. Unlike other compression programs, lzop can directly write the data it is compressing into an ISO 9660 filesystem, with no need for an intermediary archive file. Unlike other archive formats, lzop's format can be read by any standard text-based file editor, so that you can access your files without a separate program like WinZip or WinRar. "Being named for Ken Grossman, a true legend in the Humboldt County brewing community, is amazing and unexpected," says Grossman. "He's obviously a dear friend and an inspiration to me, and we're so pleased to see his name on something that will be enjoyed by so many people in this area." The brewery, named for the "short stop" baseball term that refers to the infield, will produce three year-round products and one seasonal, porter-style beer — Uncle Ken's Best Brown Ale — made with a high percentage of whole, organic ingredients. Grossman, a California native who's a graduate of U.C. Berkeley's School of Law and a former Big Lots president and CEO, chose Arcata, Calif., because of its local economic and environmental impact, and because the community, and nearby unincorporated area of Round Valley, are among the growing number of places in the United States that promote food production based on organic, sustainable agriculture practices. Grossman's selection is not only a proud Humboldt moment for him, but for customers of the around 22 retail stores

Additionally, a new method to compress one line at a time for files was implemented to save memory in large files. lzop Features: The lzop library is small, it is easy to use and understand, and it has compression and decompression speed close to what the gzip package achieves.
