What's new:

: Look at the state of Philly and you can only cry, but cry you shall. The Eagles have been a regular participant in the NFC Championship game since I can remember. Recent years, however, have been a lot closer than the "mere" ones since 1999 (I include the 2001 game that they lost to New York). They haven't made it all that far since they celebrated the Reggie White Pats-like game in 2000. Now, when other teams have come close to playoffs on the rare occasion they haven't had a Dominique, an Owens, a Terry, or a Parcells...well, that they could've certainly used a healthy LJ, but I digress. I guess we'll find out, since it's safe to assume that nothing will be done in order to get us into the playoffs so that we can have that platform to celebrate the Philadelphia Eagles in the postseason again. Now, I don't want to blame them for anything. It's not that simple. I understand that a football team needs to upgrade certain positions of need, such as quarterback, starting left tackle, starting defense, and starting wide receiver. Looking at the depth chart, we see that if there is no new contract or trade it looks like our starting defense will be "Suggs-like" (Despite his age and previous injuries, he's still a very good linebacker)-but not perfect- with out LJ, a possibility is L. Alexander. Going into last season, the depth chart listed Suggs, DeMeco Ryans, Howard, and a not so ambiguous J. Rhodes. When one of the three starters went down, it was unlikely we'd see J. Rhodes. Besides, the depth chart had ended up being correct: Howard was out for the year and Russischev was concussed the following week. Nice job depth chart except it had no depth. I understand that if they get a decent tackle we're good to go. He won't have to be Manning or so. He'll have to be good enough to get us to the playoffs. I understand that the loss of LJ means we won't have depth if they get a quarterback. However, with the problems the Eagles are having with Jason Peters potentially being out for 9-16 months, would it really be a bad thing if they'd get a (young) quarterback ready? Could it be anyone else? No, it's Brett Keisel. And I don't think six games into the season anything counts greatest underdog story. Yes, because nothing is more awesome than imagining someone you don't know on the internet being totally amazing at music and just... being. How much does the genre we listen to affect where we are, our outlook, our choices? What color is your hair, and what's your opinion on it? And beyond just simple questions like that, answers to the world record-holding gamer Hans. If you paid any attention to the internet in early December, the topic of "Mjolnir Vs Thor" was all over the place. By then 4chan and the GameTheory subreddit had already been tangled up in a fascinating conversation, which in a larger context, is where we wind up right now. So, what was this talk about? What if it's accepted that all music can be expressed by some form of digital code which can be kind of like alchemy because of how quickly we can alter the "material" of our sonic landscape, and that manipulating these long-ways we now fabricate the songs we make?

And is there something to be said for alchemy having been bastardized by the modern loss of nature? Or is there more beauty in it the way it is, in its primal state where
