I'm usually pretty confident in my ability to communicate what I'm working on, but I'm still fairly new to it. How do you test your landing page copy? ===== huntero Our copy was stolen by another vendor from a company we had a licensing agreement with. It was stolen in a file called "Copy.xls". No explanation, merely a copied file. Word was not even open, but a hardcopy was left. ~~~ theyCallMeSwift Holy crap... Asking for you, and those who do this sort of thing for a living, how do you verify copy, before you start work on a website and in this case landing page copy? Do you have to read every line of a file? ~~~ bowyakka I would know within seconds if the copied lines were mine. ----- davismwfl I don't think I have a way, I just go with what I feel is good and then work on improvement. Most of the time I use A/B testing I start with two versions and slowly improve. I don't think you can "test" copy, not as I use the term. You should have an understanding of how to write your copy and have some great ideas, but I always want to read more than you explain it. If you are clueless as you state, then you need to either study it or test some ideas before you put a lot of effort into it. I write pretty good stuff most of the time, but I have plenty of subpar nows. It is about trial and error. ----- tocomment It's not really a copy test, but I like to use blind people on each copy. ----- rmc [c6a93da74d
