Let's face it. From light shaping to full opacity channel mapping, a single photon can change your life. Or at the least it can offer you a new understanding of how to dramatically change your workflows. finalRender gives the artist and animator full access to all of the dynamic stylization possibilities that come with photon rendering. In addition to the standalone rendering plugin for 3ds Max, finalRender became a core part of every new single release of thinkingParticles. You can work with massive OpenVDB operations in 3ds Max and thanks to thinkingParticles Subscription Drop 10 those massive data sets can easily be handled and visualized with finalRender. If You are an architect, a general 3D vizualisation artist or a visual effects pro, finalRender covers it all. Just pick the one rendering solution that does it all. subscribe to the latest feature drop for your favorite plugin. What you love best about the finalRender rendering solution is the fact that it can render huge data volumes within your 3ds Max scene. FinalRender is best suited to work with large raytraced data set and has an ability to render huge VDB data in 3ds Max 2014-2015. Which means you can use finalRender to render all sorts of complex photorealistic characters and objects and allow your artists to have enough performance to rapidly visualise the data and create highly realistic results in a matter of minutes or hours. If you are in the age-group of FX and require more than only basic rendering to get the job done, you should be interested in finalRender. finalRender is also the optimal choice for debugging and solving rendering bugs. The plugin offers a 2nd rendering engine. This engine is completely independent of the 3ds Max rendering engine, allowing for easier debugging and isolation of rendering bugs. This is used for 3ds Max 2014-2015. The 2nd engine allows for much faster iteration and simplifies asset creation and asset management.
