ESET NOD32 Antivirus Smart Security 9.0.386 (x86.x64) Keygen

This is only happening when SSL scanning is enabled on the ESET NOD32 Antivirus Smart Security 9.0.386 (x86.x64) keygen program. In the ESET NOD32 Antivirus Smart Security 9.0.386 (x86.x64) keygen program, under Settings>Scanning>Advanced>SSL & TLS, there is an option for "Disable SSL/TLS scanning." When I left this option set to "Off," a dialog box showed "SSL & TLS scanning is off." However, when I changed this to "On," the problem came to light. To try this, first turn on SSL scanning... and then turn it off and then back on again. Also note that I get these same warning messages with the same level of intensity on all of my other Windows 7/10 PCs, except for my new Win 10.1 laptop, which has no ESET on it. No other computer has had any issues at all with SSL scanning. In summary, given the lack of a root CA on the issuer certificate (X4), along with the fact that ESET does not recognize the issuer of the primary CA cert -- it seems that ESET cannot be trusted. I would feel much more comfortable switching to another solution if they would provide a valid reason for why not, but I can't see why they would. All I can say is, trust me... trust me for a moment. Trust that I will protect your systems -- because, in my opinion, ESET just does not provide enough of a reason to trust. Trust me and you will be fine. Trust me for a moment. Trust me for a moment. Meanwhile, I've discovered that part of the reason the Win 8.1 computers cannot be trusted is that they are configured to look up <https://google.com> and <http://www.google.com> in the list of "trusted" sites. This is odd, because both <https://google.com> and <http://www.google.com> are not https sites and should not be trusted. If ESET wants to protect users against insecure websites, then all they need to do is simply add <https://google.com> and <http://www.google.com> as a "trusted" site. 5ec8ef588b
