Movies - A movie, also known as a film or motion picture, is a series of still or moving images which, when shown in succession, may provide an entertaining and/or informative presentation to an audience.[1] The first movies were narrated or stenciled in opus film format on a cylinder of celluloid, e. g., The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County (first film). In the early 20th century, this format was gradually replaced by the easel projection screen, made possible by the development of cinematography. This format was later replaced by the modern anamorphic screen. A movie may be referred to as a film, motion picture, or movie. The term picture can refer to a still frame of the movie or to the entire movie. The term motion picture is common in English-speaking countries, while the term film is more common in other English-speaking countries and in Italian. Motion pictures are recorded either physically, e. g., using photographic film that is visible when chemically exposed and developed, or digitally, using an electronic sensor, such as a charge-coupled device (CCD), complementary metal-oxide semiconductor (CMOS) or active matrix liquid-crystal display (AMLCD). Movies are typically displayed in a movie theater or a private home for entertainment purposes, a movie is typically shown at home in a dedicated room called a movie theater, and may be watched by more than one person simultaneously. Its production and exhibition is regulated by the Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA), Film means a series of still or moving pictures that are shown to an audience, usually in succession.[2] The first movietheaters were initially built in Europe and the United States for vaudeville and live stage shows, and later they were modified for experimental films and advertisements. During the silent film era (approximately 1897-1929), motion pictures were called films. As filmmaking technology and techniques improved and film became an established form of entertainment, it became distinct from theater (including vaudeville). The terms film, motion picture and movie have overlapping but distinct meanings and usages. The first movie was a short film made by a man named William Kennedy Dickson in 1895. He projected it on the Vitascope device, which included a small, horizontal disk containing a series of tiny, horizontal, the filmmaker adjusted the disk so that one frame of film contained a series of images that could be seen while the disk spun. The Vitascope
