Lightroom is certainly one of the best photo management/editing applications available. Does anyone know when Final Cut will be able to mirror/contrast via Photoshop CS6 - or other photo editing software? I'd like to be able to complete my video/film editing in Lightroom but cannot due to the work we do more than handle a photo - it's a bit frustrating. Is it that hard to open multiple projects, start one and leave it open and then open another and leave it open? Work on those 5 or 10 projects, change some things and then close the first one and then open the next one and leave it open? Enables going back to the familiar road map. For most it takes spending an hour or 2 to discover this is the new workflow and then an hour of wincing to get back to the old workflow. Imagine how these unbelievers would feel if you told them that with every update, they are going to have to spend an extra hour getting things the way they like it. That's the reason why the release of Photoshop 7 is so far behind the release of the New workflow. I have been working on my photos using both Beta releases, it is amazing how much the software improves every month. The preview (not the smart preview, but the actual preview) has always been extremely helpful and that alone makes the Beta release worth it. I hope we will see Photoshop 7 final pretty soon. I think the biggest single aspect of this release for me is the new Layers panel. I have been using Photoshop as a 2D file organizer for a good number of years, and the Layers panel helps me organize my work far faster than a tool like Bridge can, and far cheaper than Photoshop itself.
