How to get the right class of an object in EmberJS I have a weird situation here. First of all, I have a component called 'components.toolbar' that provides some common functionality. In this component I want to change the title depending on the state. I'm doing it like this:
`if(this.get('item.state') === state) this.set('title', item.name);` The issue here is that this will not recognize that item is not an Object. That means if I send a string instead of an object (item.state instead of item.state), I will get an error. How can I get the right object in this case? I know that I can do it like: `if(this.get('item') instanceof ToolbarItem) this.set('title', item.name);` but this will only work for one object. What can I do to solve this with EmberJS? A: That means if I send a string instead of an object (item.state instead of item.state), I will get an error. No, because object is correctly treated as an object, and you are checking that the object's type is equal to a string. You may want to check item instead, but anyway this will not cause errors. How can I get the right object in this case? Sometimes it is enough to inspect its type and convert it to a different value. `if (this.get('item') instanceof ToolbarItem) { this.set('title', Ember.String.create({ value: item.name, type: typeof item.name })[typeof item.name]); }` Recent Blog Posts A New Reality by Laura M.
